Alexandria Gazette

SATURDAY EVEN'G., DECEMBER 10.

Calerali, the hangman of England, whose death has been announced by cable, held the office of public executioner for 46 years, and had the reputation of being proud of his skill in the work he was called upon to perform. He was of obscure origin, was far from propossessing to his personal appearance, and was somewhat deformed, although he possed great strength. He conducted himself in such a quiet and unstendations manner as to be considered by the English populace "mysterious." He went to and from his executions in as private a way and with as little ceremony as possible, and his conduct in this respect was attributed to his fear of the people, who he believed hated and des-pised him on account of his office. His private life was uneventful, and his world wide notoriety is mainly due to the fame of the criminals upon whom he inflied the death penalty. Reynolds, "the author of "The Court of London of "The Court of London of the London of the Court of London of the Court of London of the London don," published a romance several years ago in which Calcraft and his daughters figured, and the principle executions of the former were the main events of the story. This publication had an extensive circulation, and from it most of the absurd stories about Caleraft had their
